Workforce challenges
Building resiliency through retention, recruitment and reimagining care delivery

It’s an unprecedented time for hospitals as they struggle to attract and retain a resilient workforce while maximizing operational efficiencies. In addition to labor shortages, they are also facing increased competition, escalating costs and staff burnout.

The COVID-19 pandemic has exacerbated preexisting trends

- Stress on care processes, staffing models and skill mix
- Continuum of care shifts
- Clinical workforce shortages
- Staff disengagement, burnout and turnover

An increased pressure on staff

- 60% of health care workers report their mental health has been affected by their work during the pandemic
- 57% of physicians report inappropriate feelings of anger, fearfulness or anxiety due to COVID-19, but only 14% have sought medical attention
- >50% of physicians report significant symptoms of burnout
- 30% of health care workers are considering leaving their profession
- 23% of physicians would like to retire within the next year, including one in three physicians age 46 or older

Building, retaining and optimizing your workforce is more critical than ever

Health care workforce burnout will be the second pandemic that U.S. health care will need to address. Although hospitals have many ways to improve operational efficiency and train their workforce, they need to understand how to improve the mental health and wellness of that same workforce.

Turnover of licensed nurses has almost doubled since 2019

These dynamics have made operating with excellence more challenging than ever

- Workforce availability, acquisition, retention and engagement
- Capacity, throughput and the need to operate more efficiently than ever
- Maintaining and improving quality across the full continuum
- Culture, systems and workflow disruptions impact outcomes and sustainability

A resilient workforce

- Improve quality of care
- Increase operating margins
- Reduce reliance on temp and contract labor
- Expand access to care
- Optimization

Doing the most with the staff you have is more critical than ever

If hospitals fail to implement changes to address their workforce challenges, they will continue to deal with the following hurdles:

- Burnout
- Retention leading to turnover
- Staff shortages leading to continued spend on contract labor
- Operational challenges associated with managing patients and patient volume
- Matching staffing to demand
- Declining patient outcomes
- Stunted growth and the inability to add services
